Information provided in this edition of Tech It Easy is designed to help individuals with disabilities, families, advocates, and providers identify assistive technology (AT) funding resources. Additional information is located under the "Resources" tab on our website (www.accesstechnologiesinc.org). Programs change over time, so we always welcome any new information for this funding guide. Special Education Programs

The Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) guarantees that all eligible children with disabilities age 3 to 21 will receive a free public education designed to meet his or her individual needs.

To qualify for Special Education Programs that are mandated by the IDEA, a student must have a disability. In addition, an Individualized Education Program, otherwise known as an IEP, developed by the educators and parents must specify all of the educational services planned for a student, including assistive technology (AT) devices and services that will aid in achieving a full education.

Parents needing assistance from a Special Education program should consult with the Disability Services Program Director, at their child's school.

iCanConnect – Oregon

Communication is essential for staying healthy, holding a job, managing a household and even participating in the community. Modern technology has expanded the way most people communicate through voice, data and video services. But for people with combined vision and hearing loss, special equipment may be necessary to make a phone call, send an email or even access the Internet. Sometimes this equipment can be as simple as adding a signaler to the telephone to alert an individual when their phone is ringing, or an easy to use cell phone designed with large print and amplification.

For some people it may include FaceTime on an iPad, or a more complex solution like using a braille display to "see" what is on the computer screen.

If you have combined hearing and vision loss, and experience difficulties with your telecommunication independence, you may qualify for free telecommunication tools and training through iCanConnect. In Oregon, iCanConnect activities are carried out by your team of Specialists at Access Technologies, Inc.

For more information, visit our website at www.accesstechnologiesinc.org, call ATI at 1-800-677-7512, or you may email our team at: info@accesstechnologiesinc.org.
